

The Reality Problem: Why we as a species are hosed.

A No Touch Monkey! Editorial
by Cap'n Marrrrrk

After this weekend's deal with the Bigfoot guitar,¹ I recieved a slap in the face and remembered of a forgotten understanding. Mainly that reality is pretty goddamned flexible, and how we perceive it is directly related to our brain chemistry. Thing is, at at nealy all times there is an emotional override waiting to jump in and short circuit our critical thinking faculties when we least expect it, and are completely unaware of it, causing us to believe the world is X not Y, or W and Z.

Right now rockets are flying back and forth across the Middle East, as a result of emotional overrides, creating more unconscious hot buttons by the thousands (internationally by the millions).

Thinking Critically, there is no need for war, no shortage of land, resources and materials. Human Utopia is attainable right this moment if everyone were to put asside their racial, cultural, and other bullshit differences, but we can't. The goddamned emotional override runs the fucking show and its programs change reality to make a people chosen by god, to make others believe that Jews run the world, that Jesus saves and war is just. Many people belive these critically idiotic things, this is their world. They respond to these ideals, their actions are based on their perceived emotional truths.

We are fucked.

1. In which after missing out on a really good guitar deal, I was unable to resist the first deal that resembled the previous deal, and thus spent $450 bucks on a guitar I am likely to sell.